Circuits, LLC Puts Safety First

Flexible PCB manufacturer has “inflexible” safety policy

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

MURRYSVILLE, PA, October 16, 2009 - Circuits, LLC, a manufacturer of highly reliable flexible printed circuit boards announced today the completion of employee safety training. The safety training was part of a company-wide “Work Safe” commitment to insure the safety of employees and the excellence in the conduct of business. This commitment is evident in Circuit’s safety policy and standard operating procedures where safety precautions are built-in to the day to day operations.

The industrial safety training was presented by Core Compliance Group. Every employee was made aware of the company’s safety policy and then trained on basic safety principles, practices and HAZCOM (hazard communication). Specific training regarding personal protective equipment, electrical safety, and fork lift training were provided to those performing manufacturing and maintenance operations.

Circuits’ president, Adeodato Vigano, is committed to creating an environment in which everyone shares a concern for their own safety as well as the safety of their colleagues. Being a young company, this is the optimal time to establish and instill a “work safe” culture by providing solid information, proper training, and suitable equipment. Mr. Vigano believes that “safety can’t be an afterthought; it’s just the way we do business right from the start”. This mantra has penetrated the core of the company which allows Circuits to prevent unnecessary lost time and scheduling delays resulting from accidents.

In order to keep “work safe” an underlying theme at Circuits, safety training will be provided on a yearly basis and to all new employees going forward. Visitors must also adhere to some safety precautions such as escort requirements at the facility and wearing safety glasses in the manufacturing areas.
